Connections are a major key to being successful in the sign industry. The Texas Sign Association creates an environment where sign companies and vendors alike can work together for the betterment of the industry while building mutually beneficial relationships to promote each other's company.

-Jay Benner Altec Industries

The relationships and foundations in the electrical arena in Texas would not be where they are for Grimco if it were not for TSA. The friendships and help you guys give to the industry is priceless. Being a member of TSA is special and the bonds you make through the big summer tradeshow as well as the quarterly social events creates a huge layer of friendship at a personal level not only with customers, but also competitors and vendors that make the sign industry in Texas special. My love for the Texas market and what we are all building upon together to grow in Texas are endless, not to mention how it feels like family.

-Dan Sanders, Grimco

The benefit of being an Allied member is the opportunity to get to know sign companies in settings outside of the normal work environment where you have time to get to know them on a personal level and can create relationships and in many cases friendships.

I joined TSA in 2005 and it has been one of the best investments I have ever made. I have met people I may have never had a chance to meet and formed lasting relationships with customers, many of which I now call friends.

I value being a TSA member for the long-lasting relationships and connections I've made in the sign industry through this organization. As a partner at Principal LED, the annual convention is a great place to connect with sign shops and stay connected in supporting my community and state.
